ROB KANTER: ENVIRONMENTAL ALMANAC

Jan. 21, morning o at my key-board when was pecking away I got a phone On the dutifully outside, there's a huge bird!" I was at the window in a flash, office is one floor below mine. "Ouick," she gasped, "look she gasped, worker whose call from a co-and there, perched atop the nearest streetlight, was a first-year red-tailed hawk. occasions. Not only did the hawk pose long enough for Fortunately I keep my camera close by for just such the building, where it tried to catch a squirrel. pictures on the came in closer to a tree beside streetlight, wings .080. everyday tures: it was wearing on its wings great big tags, marked had it not been for something I noticed as I was taking picwouldn't mention this one Now, a red-tailed hawk is an bird in Illinois, wearing on its and nois avian ecologist Mike be involved in a local study, contacted University of Illicontacted University Ward to get the story, but neither he nor any of his colleagues Champaign-Urbana birders listserv, brought Thinking Red-tail 080 must query to birdnotes, knew anything about a more of unex> was tag 0'Hare in Chicago. pected answer. tagged by researchers at are International Airport Red-1 tail 080 are, Pullins. He is part of a team of biologists and technicians employed by the U.S. Departto connect with investiga-tors, but last week I spoke phone with one of them, Craig from taking up residence or O'Hare. In general, the mission of Wildlife Services is to Services division and based at hanging around because of the dangers they pose to aircraft ple and wildlife. At airports, this means deterring animals resolve conflicts between peoment of Agriculture's (and vice versa). Schedules being what they e, it took some time for me spoke by for me Wildlife ing the landscape to make it inhospitable to wildlife. So the Wildlife Services team makes land quickly, sure the grass is kept short, that water moves off the creeks, is minimized. such as brush growing along This begins with managand that make it cover, the mals, such as reduce numbers of larger mals mals, otes. But what's poor habitat for another, and the airlexpanses of short, welldrained grass support healthy populations of small mamfor one animal is white-tailed deer and coysuch as Canada geese, voles often good airport's These, ani-falcon, to the more common American kestrel and red-tailed hawks, which are the birds most often struck by an in turn, sional snowy owl or peregrine everything from the occaattract birds of prey, vices has worked to keep down the number of raptors at 0'Hare by trapping and relocating them, a strategy that has been pretty effective. According to Pullins, only 7 requires considerable effort to trap birds of prey, load them into pet taxis and then drive them off toward the to 12 to 12 percent of the relocated birds return. The catch is, it Since 1992, Wildlife Ser-

state line for release.
Which brings us back to Red-tail 080. It is part of a study begun by Pullins and company last year to determine how the rate of birds returning to the airport is affected by the distance they are moved from it.

just 5 miles short of the Mississippi River. Other hawks released 120 miles to the west, Red-tail 080 was trapped at 0'Hare on Sept. 21, 2010, and was one of the study birds in the study are being moved distances of 50, 75 and 100 in the

although it is common for red-tails to shift in Urbahave red-tails south during winter. been tagged for reported around Some airport they go but whether or not they return. And it will be some time before Pullins not how far away from the about how and his colleagues learn much affects rates relocation distance es of return.

sightings of 080 since Janu-ary would be happy to have Of course, I and others who have enjoyed occasional stick around here. be happy to have it group intended to foster interest in birding among youth ages 9-18. Check out their Know any young birders?

The Illinois Ornithological org. Society has recently at www.illinoisyoungbirders. letter and ages 9-18. "Illinois Young Birders, cool, mem ber-produced news further details launched 8

Institute, Environmental Almanac with the Environmental heard on WILL-AM 580 at 4:45 Office of the Provost 6:45 p.m. supported in part by the UI Rob Kanter is a senior writer Thursdays. and can be Change the study Chi-

the state, from downtown Chi-cago to Springfield, Rockford, Decatur and Albany. Others have shown up further away, from Madison, Wis., to Iowa, Alabama and even Florida. Of course the real question with regard to these birds is

Red-tail 080 SB seen from Rob Kanter's window 3 January

MANDINE ENHADONIANENT